WHAT ARE MARRIAGE INTENSIVES?

Marital intensives are programs designed for couples in crisis who need healing and restoration. Intensives may be used to supplement traditional marital therapy, or as a viable alternative. Many of the couples who participate in intensives have already made exhaustive effort at weekly counseling sessions; some have reached the point of giving up. Intensives usually range from two to four days, occur in some type of sequestered retreat setting, and are led by licensed marriage experts. Intensive marital therapy consistently produces lasting solutions to serious marital struggles by exposing and addressing the real root of the problem. Emotional connections are reestablished and couples rediscover safety in their relationship with each other, leading to true intimacy and genuine healing.

The Center for Relational Care, based in Austin, Texas, employs Intimacy Therapy—a biblically-based, clinically-sound counseling model used in Marriage Intensives for more than 15 years. Offered each month in Texas and Georgia, CRC Intensives help couples transition from disconnect and conflict to become free to love. CRC counselors lead couples to experience God's processes for healing hurts, resolving conflicts, and alleviating fears. Pre-work is conducted individually with each couple prior to the beginning of the Intensive. More information is available at www.RelationalCare.org
